Dear Mr. Mintz:

I am writing on behalf of the Consortium for the Study of Intelligence to invite you to our upcoming Colloquium on November 30-December 1, 1979, and to ask whether you would be able to participate in a round-table discussion on Friday evening, November 30. I have enclosed a copy of the Tentative Program, along with our "Statement of Purpose."

As you may know, we plan to meet every few months to consider the general topic of intelligence requirements for the 1980s. The present meeting will focus on "Analysis and Estimates." The next meeting -- on February 1 and 2, 1980 -- will take up
"Counterintelligence" and, in the spring, we expect to consider "Covert Action."

We would be most grateful if you could participate in the panel on Friday evening, to be led by Professor Allen Weinstein, on the Freedom of Information Act and the Scholarly Community.
We hope, also, that one or more current or former officials of the CIA will participate in the discussion. We would, of course, welcome your attendance at any or all of the other sessions, but we believe it would be particularly helpful to have you with us on Friday evening.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

During the past decade, there has been a flood of material dealing with intelligence, particularly American intelligence and its relationship to national security and U.S. foreign policy. Some of this information has been made available in the writings of former intelligence officials. Other major sources include Congressional documents resulting from oversight activities, and documents released under the Freedom of Information Act.

As a result, it has become increasingly possible to undertake objective, scholarly and unclassified research into the intelligence process and product, and to examine their relationship to U.S. decision-making.

In light of these new circumstances, a group of social scientists from several academic institutions decided in April 1979 to create a CONSORTIUM FOR THE STUDY OF INTELLIGENCE (CSI). Its membership includes political scientists, particularly specialists in international relations and U.S. foreign policy, historians, sociologists and professors of international and constitutional law.

CSI set for itself the following purposes:

- (i) To encourage teaching on both the graduate and undergraduate levels in the field of intelligence, as it relates to national security, foreign policy, law and ethics.
- (ii) To promote the development of a theory of intelligence -- What is it, and what is its place in American national security policy? Comparative analysis with the practice and experience of other nations will be emphasized.

94-69586-1

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE - 2 -

- (iii) To encourage research into the intelligence process itself -- analysis and estimates, clandestine collection, counter-intelligence, and covert action; and to determine the feasibility of measuring efficiency or setting standards of efficiency so that the product can be improved.
- (iv) To study the tensions between intelligence activities and the democratic and constitutional values of our society, and to seek the development of principles and methods for reconciling the two.

For various cultural and political reasons, the study of intelligence has too often been regarded by academicians as ultra vires. Their self-exclusion from the subject has inhibited an understanding of this significant instrument of the modern nation-state.

Dear [redacted]

I promised you my own comments on your paper and for what they are worth to you they are as follows:

1. [redacted] was correct when he stated that the paper needed to be a good deal more precise as to what the law requires or policy dictates. This area has become so sensitive that we need to be very precise and must avoid at all costs those confusions which arise when the law is misunderstood.

b7C

2. Granted that the paper was written absent a clear definition by the group as to the line between "counterintelligence" and "domestic security," nevertheless this lack of distinction causes considerable damage to the paper. If it is your argument that domestic radical organizations lacking significant foreign direction or control are nonetheless legitimate subjects of counterintelligence inquiries, then, of course, what you cite as a decline in the size of the U.S. counterintelligence effort is correct. If, on the other hand, you believe that the functions are divisible, and I strongly believe that they are, then our counterintelligence effort has in fact grown. The size of the domestic security effort has declined because of judgments as to the nature of the threat and the need for an appropriate response.

3. There is, of course, no criminal standard for a counterintelligence collection. The standard for using so intrusive a technique as a wiretap is quite logically higher as that technique would be employed when the basic nature if not the full scope of an individual's activity was known. The problems the paper encounters here may be illustrated, I think, by suggesting the difference between the standard for "seizing evidence" as set forth on page five and for "keeping tabs" on page six. The first activity involves constitutionally protected Fourth Amendment rights. The latter is a matter of executive discretion.

4. Counterintelligence work within the FBI, in what is my admittedly biased opinion, has never been of better quality. Far from being unpopular work our surveys show more Agents wishing to become involved than we have counterintelligence slots for. While there are many good things that can be said of the "good old days" one of them is not that our counterintelligence officers were better trained. It is quite true that for a long time all counterintelligence services enjoyed a period where they still had active a number of men who had been in since the beginning. Their accumulated knowledge was important, but it was acquired for the most part on the job. Today we must train them and we cannot realistically expect them to have the knowledge of past activities of their predecessors who lived through them.

5. CIA and the FBI work very well and closely together these days. It is in my judgment a far broader based and healthier relationship than ever existed in the past.

Finally, I would only suggest a word of caution. All operatives resent restrictions whether imposed by immediate supervisors, headquarters or the rules. That being the case and given a sympathetic audience it is not surprising to hear the theme "if they'd only let us do the job we'd be a great success." Again in my judgment rules are important and I would heartily endorse [redacted] comments that those operatives who are skillful and motivated can do the job and those who aren't can blame the rules.

I thank you for inviting me. The sessions were stimulating if at times frustrating. It is difficult for those of us who are still engaged in the process to debate the facts with those outside the process, but that there is broad support from a number of quarters for what those of us in the counterintelligence shop are trying to do was very apparent and that, of course, eased the frustrations.

Sincerely,

James E. Nolan

Dear Ed:

I am writing to invite you to attend our next Colloquium on "Clandestine Collection: Requirements for the 1980's," which will be held at the International Club, Washington, D.C., on Friday and Saturday, October 30 and 31, 1981. Enclosed is an outline of the program. We expect 50-60 specialists from the Executive and Legislative branches of government as well as the academic community to attend, and we would very much welcome your participation. Please let me know soon if you can be with us for either or both days.

If you can attend, we will send you a more detailed program and several of the papers approximately a week before the meeting.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear [redacted]

Unfortunately Ed O'Malley will be out of Washington on October 30 and 31, 1981, and therefore will be unable to attend the Colloquium.

When Ed is away, I am bound to the office, so I am afraid the 30th is also not possible for me. I will certainly do my best to attend on the 31st, but it may not be possible.

I know you have many requests to attend these sessions, but if you have a spot available, I would like to recommend to you, [redacted] is a Special Assistant to Ed and is responsible for a wide range of policy and legal issues, including legislation, charter, guidelines, et cetera. He is well known to the Intelligence Committees and to the General Counsels and legislative people of the other agencies of the Intelligence Community.

If this is possible please let me know. It sounds like a good session, I will be sorry to miss it.

Sincerely,

~~DISCONTINUED SYSTEM~~
Honorable William H. Webster
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
9th and Pennsylvania Ave, NW, Rm. 7176
Washington, DC 20535

Dear Mr. Webster:

I am writing to invite you to participate in the first of our colloquia on "Intelligence Requirements for the 1990's." The purpose of these meetings is to consider the intelligence resources, products, processes, and organization needed to promote the national interest most effectively in the next decade.

The focus of the first colloquium is "Threats and Opportunities Facing the US in the 1990's." Specialists in a variety of fields will attempt to anticipate the world environment in the late 1980's and early 1990's. Your contribution to the discussion and debate about their papers would help construct a scenario of future threats and opportunities facing the US, so that later in the year we will be able to consider our specific intelligence needs given the likely global environment.

As you can see from the attached program, the areas of inquiry at the colloquium will be both regional and thematic. The participants will be current and former intelligence practitioners, academics, and specialists from business, labor, Capitol Hill, and the media. The papers will be distributed to the participants in advance. At the colloquium, the paperwriters will summarize their conclusions, and discussants who have different perspectives will critique the papers. The floor will then be open to general discussion. To stimulate a frank exchange of views, remarks made during the discussion period are not for attribution, except with permission of the speaker.

Hon. William Sessions
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
10th and Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Rm. 7176
Washington, DC 20535

Dear Mr. Sessions:

I am writing to invite you to participate in our colloquium on "Intelligence Requirements for the 1990's." This program will build on the Consortium's meeting last April on "Threats and Opportunities Facing the US in the 1990's." The purpose of the upcoming colloquium will be to explore how the US can go about obtaining and using the intelligence necessary to meet the anticipated challenges of the next decade.

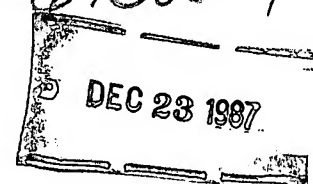

The Colloquium will be held at the International Club in Washington, DC, on December 4-5, 1987.

We have asked specialists in a variety of fields to present papers attempting to anticipate the collection, analytical, covert action and counterintelligence requirements the US will need for the remainder of the 20th Century. In discussing each element of intelligence, three areas will be examined: (i) the kinds of intelligence missions or products the US should seek in the next decade; (ii) the procedures, resources, personnel, etc. necessary to accomplish these objectives; and (iii) the bureaucratic or organizational structure that would enable the US to accomplish these missions. For your information, we have attached a preliminary program.
